Friends,

Even a cursory glance at a calendar reveals that Jesus Christ is not the only birthday our society celebrates as a holiday. Yet, there is a difference between the other birthdays we celebrate and the birth of Jesus Christ. Not only is Jesus' birthday never transferred to a more convenient day of the week or combined with another like Him, but also the intensity of the celebration is significantly greater. Why?

To answer this question, we must fast-forward thirty-three years after Jesus' birth. It is then that the baby lying in the manger will be hanging in agony on the cross. His face will be bloodied, not only from the crown of thorns fastened to His head, but also from the beatings it endured. His body, previously battered by whips and falls, now suffers from total exhaustion from carrying His cross. After three hours of agony hanging on that cross, the baby whose birth we celebrate at Christmas will die.

If that were the end of the story, however, Christmas would be no different than President's day, Martin Luther King Jr. day or any day honoring a great individual. But the best is yet to come. On the third day after His death, the baby whose birth we celebrate at Christmas, Jesus the Christ, rose from the dead. In rising from the dead, Jesus proved that baby on Christmas morning is not simply a great man. All men, regardless of how great or wise they may truly be, eventually fall under the power of death. But, not so with Jesus! In fact, when Jesus Christ rose from the dead, He demonstrated a power reserved to God alone; the power over death. In doing so, the child born to Mary proves that He is not merely a man. Jesus is also God.

Basking in the light provided by Jesus resurrection, we see how cataclysmic the birth of Jesus Christ really is. It is the birth of God into our world. Think about it this way. Suppose that Bill Gates, the richest man in the world, decided to forfeit his wealth and become, say, a cockroach; and not some prestigious cockroach, mind you, not a cockroach destined to achieve fame and fortune (whatever that means for a cockroach). Rather, suppose Bill Gates became some ordinary, insignificant cockroach; a cockroach consigned to live in anonymity for most of his life in some irrelevant part of the world. Of course, when Bill the cockroach finally did achieve some fame through incredibly insightful teaching and miraculous good works, he is crucified as a notorious criminal by the very cockroaches he came to save. Then, even when you think of it that way, we still have no idea, ABSOLUTELY NONE, of the humiliation God endures when He assumes a human nature.

What does this prove but the greatness of God's love for us? Is it really any wonder why George Fredrick Handel when composing a work describing this act of love by God has his singers exclaim "Hallelujah!" over and over and over again? The only human response fitting to such an act of love by his creator is one of ecstatic exuberance.

Yet I wonder how many of us would describe our experience of Christ's birth as ecstatic exuberance. Or rather, how many of us would describe the Christmas season as an arduous chore that, although it relieves us from a day of work, really only serves to burden us with a thousand other obligations, family or otherwise, that make us wish for it all to end?

Well, if you want to restore that ecstatic exuberance that really defines the season of Christmas to your life, there is a surefire solution – practice. For just as practice makes perfect in other endeavors, so, too, practice makes perfect in celebrating Christmas. Of course, the way we practice celebrating Christmas is by celebrating, hopefully every week, the Holy Sacrifice of the Mass. For notice what happens in the mass. At mass, the Second Person of the Blessed Trinity takes on an appearance that is even more demeaning to Him than our humanity was; the appearance of bread and wine. Thus, each mass is like a microcosm of Christmas. For at each mass, Jesus once again shows His love by taking on the aspects of one of His creatures.

In Christ,

Fr. EJA
